"I beg your pardon, Mr. Butterworth," said Miss Pollard, "the letter containing that statement was from New-Orleans."

"Were you in New-Orleans then?"

"To DECEIVE RODES.

"I was never in New-Orleans in my life. Mr. Breckinridge knows perfectly well why these letters were written—they were written to deceive Mr. Rodes. They were sent to my mother while I was in Cincinnati before and after my baby was born, and she malled them to Mr. Rodes."

"I' did it to cover up suspicion. If I had not asked for II, he would have wondered how I lived. I did not want the money, for Mr. Breckinridge would have supplied all I needed. Every letter bears the mark of what I say."

To another question Miss Pollard exclaimed that she wrote these letters to cover up her tracks from Rodes at Colonel Breckinridge's suggestion. "He knows all those little tricks of deceit," she added. "And I want to say that the main letters written to mamma were dictated by Mr. Breckinridge, taken by him to postal cars, to anywhere to cover up a postmark and deceetive her. He sometimes wrote to mamma herself and often filled in the dates of the letters to Mr. Rodes."

HER STORY OF WHAT OCCUPRED.

After some rand interchanges of remarks, in which Miss Pollard made many interruptions, trying to tell the story her own way, she finally managed to tell it. Mr. Breckinridge, she said, had joined her the Sunday night of his marriage at the Hoffman House, and said he might have to go away. He said a big company had been formed with Mr. Whitney, Mr. Fairchild and other rich men, with a capital of $30,000,000 and that they were going to commission him to go abroad. "He wanted to know," she said, "if I would marry him and go abroad with him. I said, "Willie, I will go with you at a minute's notice." He wanted to put some of his clothes together, and I looked over his telescope bag and found a revolver in it. I he came suspicious at this, for he had been acting very oddy. He said he had gone out to see Mr. Whitney and Mr. Fairchild. I telephoned them, they had not seen him. He said he had gone out to see Mr. Whitney and Mr. Fairchild. AN INTENSELY DRAMATIC SCENE.

The scene during all this examination was tragic and exciting, Miss Pollard leaning forward in the Washington, March 29.-Tals was Madeline Pol- witness-bex and looking squarely at Colonel Breckinridge as she delivered her charges against him.

Washington, March 20.—Tails was Madeline Polard's third day of the ordeal of cross-examination, and in anticipation of secing and hearing her the usual throng surged about the doors leading to the Circuit Court room this morning.

Miss Pollard took the stand and Major Butterworth began to question her about her acquantions with Mrs. Luke Blackburn, of Kentucky, who had testified that Colonel Breckinridge put Miss Pollard under her charge as, his affianced wife.

This line of inequiry suggested to the spectators the claim of Colonel Breckinridge put Miss Pollard under her charge as, his affianced wife.

This line of inequiry suggested to the spectators the claim of Colonel Breckinridge that he will controvert Mrs. Blackburn's testimony. Miss Pollard said she met Mrs. Blackburn in the winter of 180-81.

A letter was then handed to her by Major Butterworth, with the request that she examine it. "This is written to Mr. Rodes," she said. "It is in my handwriting;" and then, a minute later, "Why is the heading torn off that letter, Mr. Butterworth."

"I don't know, Miss Pollard, you must not ask questions of Mr. Butterworth, "said Mr. Carlisle, her attorney, and Miss Pollard, you must not ask questions of Mr. Butterworth, "said Mr. Carlisle, her attorney, and Miss Pollard, you must not ask questions of Mr. Butterworth, "said Mr. Carlisle, her attorney, and Miss Pollard, you must not ask questions of Mr. Butterworth, "said Mr. Carlisle, her attorney, and Miss Pollard, you must not ask questions of Mr. Butterworth then read the letter, which was dated Lexington, Ky, November 29, 1834, It begged Rodes for $49 to pay her board bill and called him "dear." Other letters to Rodes were also read. More letters were shown her by Major Butterworth. Major Butterworth referred to a statement of the said with a half laugh. "Tm so glad they are."

THE LIMIT OF SACRIFICE.

"It was more than being willing," the witness ex-claimed, passionately. "I did as he said; I gave and then came the most interesting part of the my babies away because he asked me. He said that if I kept them it would be traced to him, and they would be known as his children. A woman can't do more than that-can't do more than that (with a voice trembling with feeling). I saw my last child laid in the dark grave because it neeled a mother's care and because I could not give it.

"What" — Major Butterwarth started to say, and then, "Oh. I beg your pardon."

Miss Pollard's voice had dropped from a tone of intense accusation to a long-drawn sob, and she wept like one whose very heart was in danger of breaking. It was then 2 o'clock, just fifteen minutes before the time for adjournment. Major Butter-laworth whispered nomething to Mr. Carlisle, and Mr. Carlisle, rising, said the defence could finish Miss Pollard's examination with greater rapidity if she would take the stand again in the morning, and they therefore asked an adjournment. Judge Bradley adjourned the court and Miss Pollard quickly made her way out of the courtroom.
